RUSSIAN/ENGLISH E

During my long military career with Soviet Armed Forces I encountered many memorable events and meetings. However, after reading memoires sent to me by Officer Fedor Nikolayevich DUCHOVNY I am reminded of one particularly unusual circumstance.

In early 1983 I received an order from the Military Command to provide necessary assistance and cooperation to joint Soviet-American military group known then as "Officer Duchovny's Group", which operated on the territory of the Soviet Union in areas under my command where military operations were conducted.

This particular event was unusual because it took place in the period of cold war between the two superpowers. The threat of leakage of biological weapons was seen as tremendous threat to the entire world civilization, and so both sides were able to find a way to communicate and cooperate with each other for a common cause.

"Officer Duchovny's Group" was led by Frank Dux, an American military officer with special branch of the military which was involved in searching for ways by which leaks of biological weapons were occuring. Frank Dux, dubbed "The Hunter", and his group were in the Soviet Union for just a few weeks, but our intelligence already had information about exceptional talents of "The Hunter" and his unique ability to investigate extremely dangerous and complicated matters.

Such unique experience of joint cooperation between the Soviet Union and United States can serve as an example of bravery and basis for this moral: it is very hard to survive in this world without cooperation.
